Over the past few months you may have heard Joe talk about the dozer he had purchased and that he and Don were going through it mechanically. Well, they completed that task and are now just trying to find tracks. If you know of any that will fit this TD-6, please let Joe know.

JUNEAU PASSES PRO-MINING RESOLUTION

Resolution denounces anti-mining initiatives (ANCHORAGE) – The city and borough of Juneau passed a resolution Monday denouncing the anti-mining initiatives set to appear on the August 26th ballot. The resolution states, in part, “it appears that numerous existing projects would potentially become subject to the initiatives,” and goes on to say that the city and borough are concerned that these initiatives are on the ballot “without the expert scientific analysis needed, and without the voters having a means to fully understand the policy implications of the proposals and make an informed decision.”

The resolution concludes by saying that the subjects of the initiatives “would be better addressed for Alaskans through the rigorous and open public review process normally used for the development and adoption of legislation and regulations, than through the initiative process.”

Willis Lyford, Campaign Director for Alaskans Against the Mining Shutdown (AAMS) was extremely pleased by Juneau’s actions. “Alaska’s Capital City is the first to stand up and echo what AAMS has been saying all along: these initiatives go too far. This resolution recognizes the importance of a thorough study of these anti-mining measures. We hope that all Alaskan communities, and all Alaskans, will take a serious look at the drastic impact of these measures.”

More information about AAMS and endorsements they have received is available at www.againsttheshutdown.

Since there was not much news to talk about, the evening was spent:

1. Learning to use metal detectors
2. Tuning up our metal detectors
3. Metal detecting practice
